FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE

Donald JONES Scoring against Kidney Disease

FORMER NFL PLAYER, DONALD JONES RELEASES HIS COMPELLING NEW AUTOBIOGRAPHY, THE NEXT QUARTER: SCORING AGAINST KIDNEY DISEASE

Donald Jones, III, a former professional athlete, entrepreneur, motivational speaker, father, husband, and now author shares his personal journey of growing up in the inner city of Plainfield, New Jersey to playing in the National Football League (NFL), being diagnosed with an incurable kidney disease, to his triumphant experience of becoming a kidney transplant survivor in his compelling and inspirational new autobiography, The Next Quarter: Scoring Against Kidney Disease.

At the age of 23, standing six feet tall, weighing over 200 pounds, Jones' heart was overflowing with the spirit of determination and grit. He had always dreamed of playing in the NFL and the opportunity he had worked countless hours for was finally coming to fruition. Though he captured the attention of several NFL organizations during his successful career playing football at Youngstown State University, Jones' name was not called on Draft Day, but a call would soon come from the Buffalo Bills who signed Donald as an undrafted free agent in 2010. As a wide receiver for the Bills, between 2010 – 2012, he racked up 82 receptions for 887 yards, and scored six touchdowns while playing in 35 games, 22 in which he started.

Jones' journey to the NFL was truly an uphill battle marred with numerous challenges, disappointments and setbacks. As a kid growing up in the inner city, Donald was exposed to a community saturated with drugs and violence; a lifestyle that would normally prohibit most from experiencing any type of success in life. Consequently, his exposure to an underworld of crime caused him to get an A in street smarts but a D in the classroom. He not only lost a full-scholarship to a superior Division-1 school, Donald became entangled in a drug investigation, which caused NFL scouts to question his viability as a professional athlete. In The Next Quarter, Jones writes, "I had to make my mistakes in life before I realized that I was wasting my time and talent. It really started to bother me that the police knew me on a first-name basis. I put so much energy into being the best looking and most popular that I neglected to pursue my dreams right away. I wanted to fit into crowds I had no business being around. I didn't realize that I already had the golden ticket in my hand."

Determination and perseverance are two words Donald Jones uses to describe his climb to success on the field. Faith is the word he expresses to describe his battle against kidney disease. His sophomore year in college, Jones was diagnosed with IgA Nephropathy, also known as Berger's disease, which is an incurable autoimmune disease that affects the kidneys. While playing with the Buffalo Bills, he started experiencing symptoms such as high blood pressure and vision loss, which severely affected his health and effectiveness on the field. Subsequently, in 2013, Donald was forced to hang up his cleats and retire from the game he loved. Recalling how he felt after ending his career, Jones laments in The Next Quarter, "I had played sports since I was seven years old. I had fought tooth and nail every day just to make it in. I even became a starter in my first year after being undrafted. I beat the odds. Now I was 25 years old fighting for my life."

On December 3, 2013, Donald's life was saved with a kidney transplant from a donor who originally gave him life, his father, Donald Jones, Jr. Currently, Donald travels the country bringing attention to and raising money for Iga Nephropathy. He is a national spokesperson for the Kidney Foundation, and a board member for the IGA Nephropathy Foundation of America. Additionally, Jones has spoken on Capitol Hill before Congress, at the New York Presbyterian Hospital where he was recognized along with another transplant survivor, Robin Roberts, anchor for ABC's Good Morning America, and was recently an invited special guest to a transplant event sponsored by The Transplant Forum at Columbia University Medical Center.

Available in October of 2015, The Next Quarter: Scoring Against Kidney Disease is a motivational book that will inspire readers of all ages. Jones' story leaps off the page and grabs your attention from the very beginning. More importantly, proceeds from the sale of the book will be donated to two research studies, CureGn, GIGA-kids and to Donate Life America.

Biography of Donald Jones

While growing up in the inner city of Plainfield, New Jersey, Donald Jones, aspired to become a professional football player. Though surrounded by an environment of drugs and violence, Donald remained on track to fulfill his dreams by focusing on his athleticism, which eventually garnered him an impressive record on the field during his collegiate years and a contract with the Buffalo Bills in 2010. After suffering from complications from IgA nephropathy, an incurable kidney disease, Donald was forced to retire from the NFL very early in his career but he has not allowed the illness to defeat him. Courageously moving into the next stage of his life as a kidney transplant survivor, Mr. Jones has refocused his energy into becoming a successful entrepreneur, motivational speaker, and author who is inspiring thousands by sharing his personal journey of overcoming adversity and beating the odds.

In high school, Donald was labeled an underachiever. He would cut class by climbing out of windows and hang around the wrong crowd. Fortunately, he managed to graduate from Plainfield High School in 2006 and was recruited to play football at Lackawanna College in Scranton, Pennsylvania. From there, he transferred to Youngstown College where he began attracting scouts from the National Football League. When all 32 NFL teams contacted him about playing for their organization, he thought he was dreaming. After all of them asked the following question, "Can you first tell us about the drug bust you were involved in last year," Jones woke up. He consciously decided that this would not be his defining moment.

Donald Jones entered the National Football League as an undrafted free agent in 2010, signing with the Buffalo Bills as a wide receiver. Quickly becoming one of the teams' most valuable reserves, Jones made an impressive mark on the field. Concluding his professional football career at the age of 25, he boasts an impressive 82 catches and 887 yards and three touchdowns in 35 games. During the 2012 season, his final year of play, Jones' accomplishments were at an all-time high, as he caught 41 passes for 443 yards and four touchdowns in only 12 games. Signed by the New England Patriots in March 2013, Donald was released from the team that following July. Diagnosed with IgA nephropathy, a kidney disorder, during his sophomore year of college, Jones voluntarily elected to retire from the NFL in August 2013 as a result of his ailing condition.

Since his subsequent retirement, Jones has immersed himself into impacting communities through an advocacy and social activism approach. Committed to educating others and raising social awareness on numerous health-related issues, in particular kidney diseases, Jones has evolved into a well noted, national motivational speaker intent on sharing his knowledge and personal testimony to generate conversations regarding healthy lifestyle choices. An inherent leader with a determined spirit, Jones has found true purpose in his life focusing on his affinity for education and athletics.

Donald recently published his autobiography, The Next Quarter: Scoring Against Kidney Disease and is President and CEO of Medicoupe, LLC, a medical transportation. He serves as a board member for the IGA Nephropathy Foundation and as a national spokesperson for the Kidney Foundation. He and his wife, Jamila, have one son named Kiion.
